

Mission Statement

Mission

The mission of the Journal of Homeland and National Security Perspectives is to contribute original, innovative, and timely student-initiated, peer-reviewed research of a significant security concern within the U.S. and abroad.

Moving Forward, *The Journal of Homeland and National Security Perspectives

Since our inaugural issue many global threats have emerged. With greater emphasis on international threats, the science of Homeland Security has provided tremendous opportunity for student research and presentation. This edition provides insight into brutal butchery, evaluation of existing policy, data loss on the home front, and narcoterrorism and associated rising threats.

2nd Edition

Looking Ahead: Future Issues in Homeland and National Security.

The Center for Security Studies at Angelo State University has a distinct student population, comprising individuals who represent a scope of professional knowledge from the local to the federal level. Because of this, we bring you a historical approach to provoke critical thinking and discussion of pertinent and very real threats to the Homeland and to National Security.
